

Moonlight & Millennium

The Cintel Millennium has once again worked its magic for the creative minds at Images Post, New Zealand. The Images team, headed up by Senior Colourist Paul Lear, has recently completed post production on Director Tom Riley's latest endeavour. His short film 'Moonlight' is described as a dark fairy story set in a dreary junkyard, where a young boy discovers salvation and escapes the oppression of his grandfather. Covered in grease and forced to sleep in a dirty old cupboard, the boy finds one night that he can wash in the reflection of the moon. 'Moonlight' was scripted around some incredible locations, and the charming performances together with Images' contribution to post production have made it a remarkably well crafted film.

Efficient DI Workflow

Discussing the post production process on 'Moonlight', Colourist Paul Lear said "Utilizing a Digital Intermediate path to complete the project allowed Director Tom Riley total control over the look and feel of the film, and enabled the Images Post team to integrate the special effects seamlessly. We chose the Millennium telecine as the starting place for our DI workflow. Scanning on the Millennium at 15 fps allows a short film to be scanned with very high quality 2K scans, in a single afternoon. We then performed the on-line compile and colour correction in our Grading Theatre. The Millennium is a great foundation for the DI workflow."

Beautiful Results

When asked about his experience with the Millennium and Images Post, Tom Riley applauded both by saying, "I wanted to make a dark and beautiful film that really grabs and holds your attention. We couldn't have achieved results like this without the facilities, expertise and enthusiasm of the team at Images. 'Moonlight' looks and feels amazing."

Keep an eye out for 'Moonlight' on the film festival circuit.
